ABSTRACT

A system receives a request from a client and verifies that the client is authenticated. If the client is not authenticated, the system maintains the request and directs the client to obtain authentication. After verifying that the client has obtained valid authentication, the authentication system processes the saved request.

